

texture. Pores darkened to brown, and bruised parts to black. Some fissures (radial in one specimen, and concentric in another) opened in the cap surface, revealing a light brown interior.

I started by going through the bracket section of color photos in the Audubon Field Guide and thought this was it by the cap colors and the droplets of amber fluid. I read the description of the species, and it matched very well.

